

B-CC at Damascus

The Barons traveled to Damascus High School on the windy evening of October 26 to meet the Hornets in a match called after the first half on account of a tornado watch. For the forty minutes played, the Barons countered two opponents: a tenacious bevy of buzzing Hornets — infused, it appeared, by senior night and a desire to take on cross-town rivals — and a wily wind that worked to deliver balls deep into Barons' territory and truncate counter-offenses. In the meantime, onlookers were left to split their gaze between the clock and a sky not quite as menacing as the forecast (a faint star or two could be seen). Nonetheless, for the sake of safety, the scoreless match was declared at the half, ending a game that will not enter the books as a tie because it was, so to speak, an unofficial game from the start. How time flies, however, 2010 entering the playoff era now when, it seems, the excitement of 2009 still hasn't faded. First playoff: November 2 at B-CC.

By Karl Klontz