

How to Cite a Gale Opposing Viewpoints “Viewpoint Essay” in Noodletools

Opposing Viewpoint’s “Viewpoint” articles are usually taken from print books called anthologies. These are collections of different articles written by different authors, all discussing a common topic. The books also include additional comments and information from the book editors. First you must cite the print publication information. Then you must cite the online information. To begin, after you have your article selected, click on the “Source Citation” link at the top of the article page. If the citation looks like the one below then it is a Viewpoint Essay and should be cited in Noodletools with the steps listed below.

1. In the Select a citation type field, choose “Anthology/Book Collection.”
2. Choose Material in a book (collection).
3. Choose Online: Text of a printed anthology or other book collection available online.
4. The Title of the entire book / anthology is listed in italics, after the article author and title.
5. The Title of the specific work (the article you are reading) is listed in quotation marks.
6. The Author(s) of the specific work is listed first in the citation, before the article title.
7. The Publication city of the anthology, the Publisher of the anthology, and the Publication year of the anthology are all listed in the citation immediately after the editor’s name.
8. The book Series Name is listed after the publication year.
9. The Editor(s) of book / anthology is listed immediately after the title of the book, preceded by “Ed.”
10. For the Name of website or online database, enter “Gale Opposing Viewpoints In Context” (This is listed in italics in the citation, after the print publication information.)
11. The URL is not required.
12. NoodleBib automatically enters the Most recent date of access (today’s date), so you don’t have to enter that information yourself.
13. Click on “Generate citation.” Your citation in Noodletools should look similar to this:
